THE CITY AND HER BONDED INDEBTEDNESS.

Another batch of Supreme Court decisions against this city, in the bond suits, has been handed down. One by one all the cases involving the issues raised between the city and her creditors are being thrown against her.

Years ago an examination of the law, a plain reading of its face, an analysis of its purpose, the judgment of the best lawyers of the city, the application of reason, the dictates of right, combined to convince this journal that, when it came, the ultimate decision would be adverse to the city relative to the levy of one per cent, for the general fund in order to place fifty-five per cent, thereof in the sinking and interest fund. The decisions of the Supreme Court in the last few days, as also all preceding decisions by it, have affirmed the position of this journal.

For years the city failed to preserve the fund as by law required. We have uniformly stated our belief that, sooner or later, the city would be punished by the Courts for this dereliction, unless a readjustment of our bonded indebtedness could be made.

For this conscientious and independent statement of opinion, the Record-Union was pummeled upon and bitterly denounced and stigmatized as "the bondholders' organ." Every prejudice was appealed to, popular clamor was invoked and every act availed of to turn public fury against the paper. The false charges and slanders, not to say vicious brutal assaults, were reiterated week in and week out, whenever the slightest pretext could be made to give seeming excuse. These verbal attacks, we have reason to believe, were prompted by the greed of the bondholders or their agents. Certainly these men, had they sought to conjure up a scheme to appropriate their bonds and enhance their value, could not have more successfully attained their end than has been done along the whole line of the litigation prosecuted or defended in the name of the city. In short, Sacramento has played into the hands of Mr. Daniel Meyer, the chief of the bondholders, and the bondholders' agents, until the values of their securities have gone up to figures nearly double those at which, by refunding, we might at one time have secured them.

The assaults and vilifications referred to, and which have rained upon the Record-Union all these years, have most largely emanated from a source of all others least warranted by discretion in charging venality. It is true, however, "that in the hue and cry of 'Stop this!' the culprit himself often slanders the loudest.

We have repeatedly expressed our belief, and stated as a fact, that some considerable portion of the city bonds were fraudulent in conception birth and holding, and have urged that such steps be taken as would cause official inquiry to be made, and in which evidences of the fact might be legitimately brought forward.

We have repeatedly urged that inquiry be made into the question whether the bonds held by Mr. Daniel Meyer and his colleagues bondholders have ever been listed for taxation, or made to contribute, as do other values, to the support of the government.

It is a remarkable fact that not one of these charges, or evidently proper demands, have met with the faintest response or seconding by those who have been most diligent in charging that the Record-Union has been prompted by the bondholders.

Conscious of its own rectitude, the Record-Union awaited the judgment of time and verity. When at last the hour struck, it crushed the infamous libels, shamed its accusers, and choked the slanders in the throat of utterance. The whole range of assaults were simply the outcome of hot intolerance on the one hand and venality and cunning on the other. It not infrequently happens that a community is led to consider as its enemy the friend who advises it well, when the counsel given runs counter to its prejudices. But in this respect we have the consolation of knowing that the soundest legal advice and the best financial and business judgment in the city has uniformly been in accord with that of the Record-Union.

Committee after committee of citizens has been appointed by this people to look into the whole bond question, and to investigate it to the bottom. Every one of these has gone to pieces upon the same reef—arriving at the conclusion that must be found by every honest and unbiased investigator. The very last of these committees was composed of an especially large number of representative citizens of financial experience and unquestioned integrity, whose entire interests are bound up with the interests of this city. It met week after week and labored most diligently. The result was that the conviction forced itself upon that body which we have referred, and without venturing to even make a report to the people, the organization melted away.

The city has not, in short, made a solitary step in advance. Not a single bond has been depreciated, nor the payment of a solitary coupon successfully resisted; she has not evaded the tribute she is forced to pay to the sinking and interest fund, but, on the contrary, has, by litigation, piled up new burdens.

There remains one resort—the Supreme Court of the United States, to which we may possibly carry up some of these bond cases. In the name of all that is dear to the city, let them be taken up and speedily decided. This long delay is a cloud to our prosperity and a drag to the feet of progress. If the city is at the mere mercy of the bondholders, the sooner the fact is placed beyond remotest possibility of doubt, the better. We have not the faintest shadow of sympathy with the bondholders; we have iterated our hope and wish for their defeat under the law. In common with all citizens who entertain sentiments of justice, we desire the right to prevail, no matter what the result. He who asks for more is extortionate, and he who demands less is dishonest.

It behooves citizens to look these matters squarely in the face to consider them as they would business interests of grave import; to be neither deceived by popular clamor nor cowed by the stigma of "bondholders' agent" that the irrational apply to all who advise the application of ordinary business wisdom to the administration of city affairs.

The combative disposition, controlled by reason, is desirable in every community, and it may be very popular to join in the cry, "Fight to the last," but the arts of peace are not unworthy of consideration, even in the effort to adjust the bonded indebtedness of the city. That we must come to a refunding sooner or later we are convinced; but we would not precedent to that have a single right of the city under the law neglected, or a solitary remedy abandoned. Whatever legal resort the city has, let it be availed of. She is in litigation now, and has no will follow it to the end. That she will be well advised to do so there is and will be no question, so long as a lawyer stands in shoe-leather or the hope of a fee remains. But in the meantime the people may well look about them, and discover if they can what the future is to be.

The interests of the city are too great, the promise for her commercial importance is too flattering for the one to be crippled or the other destroyed by a debt even aggregating so much as does ours. Sacramento never had brighter prospects. With the upbuilding of northern California and the full development of its resources, this city will enlarge her trade, increase her population and enhance her values. Such a spirit of local pride, and such a disposition to make this the most desirable of places for residence, animates our people at this time, as to warrant the forecast that in the early future we shall reap rich rewards. The debt and the bondholders' must be swept out of the way; they must not hinder our progress; we have no time for further criminalities; we must be a united people, with an eye single to the prosperity and commercial importance of the second city of the State. There is nothing in our present situation to cause despondency. Obstacles will rise before us, but only to be overcome.

We call attention to the issue of the WEEKLY UNION of to-day as a number of special articles. Its twelve large pages contain not only the latest telegraphic advices and much well-selected literary, but the full proceedings of the Northern California Immigration Convention; the proceedings of the first meeting of the Directors of the new Immigration Association for Northern California; special ethnological agricultural articles; the annual address of President Finigan of the State Board of Agriculture; full accounts of the events of the State Fair; address of E. W. Maslin on the capacity of the foothill region for grape and fruit culture, as delivered before the El Dorado District Agricultural Association; an article of special interest on the future of the State Agricultural Society on grape culture, market reports, and a large number of other valuable papers. The issue is one that especially addresses itself to the thoughtful reader, and to agriculturists and horticulturalists in particular.

The San Francisco Post, referring to the Northern California Immigration Convention, remarks that this section of California will not only be benefited by the result of the Convention's deliberation, but the moral influence of the effort will encourage people of all sections of the State to follow the praiseworthy example set at so auspicious a time by men whose purposes are so advanced by patriotism. The Post adds: "We have frequently heard travelers, who thought that they had exhausted the State, say that if they had only known of the conveniences and desirabilities of other parts, especially those that are to be represented at the Convention, they would have delayed their return."

The Northern California Immigration Convention and the recent Sacramento Convention, and proposals for it the greatest success, declaring that the labor before it is of the highest importance and full of the promise of most gratifying results.

IMMIGRATION ASSOCIATION.

Remarks of the Press Upon the Convention and Result.

(Press Herald.) Pursuant to invitation given a Convention of representative citizens from nearly all the counties comprising the central and northern portion of California met at Pioneer Hall in Sacramento Tuesday morning for the purpose of organizing what they chose to name the "Immigration Association of Northern California." The meeting was largely attended, being composed of nearly 100 members, and in appearance, as well as representative ability, it was at least equal to any body of men that has ever assembled for any purpose in this State. One idea had dominated their selection, and that was to send the best men; and the best men were there. Of the abundant and various resources of northern California, and the best men were there. Of the abundant and various resources of northern California, and the best men were there.
